All Howler G.729 licenses incorporate the innovative Howler Floating license. This is a robust, peer-to-peer licensing model. All machines on the same subnet co-operate to select a license server. If this machine goes down, the remaining machines renegotiate to select a new license server. All the original licenses will then be available. Note that if a machine goes down which is not the license server, nothing is affected (apart from a short delay before the licenses in-use on that machine become available again).

The Howler floating license relies on UDP broadcast on the subnet to find the other nodes. After this, a low-latency point-to-point UDP-based protocol is used.
